MISCELLANEOUS READING.

The following letter on this subject, from Hamsack County, Geo., will be read with in "The hams I cure, generally sell in Sa vannah at 15 to 18 cents, and are considered qual to Westphalia. Kill the hogs before day, and when they are drained, remove them to the smoke house; or, which is better, kill them at 4 or 5, P. M., and get them to the smoke house by night fall. The object is to keep the meat from the sun and thes. Cut up the meat, cutting off the hams first. o that while some of the hands are engaged in cutting up the other meat, the hams can be attended to; sprinkle a small teaspoonful of powdered saltpetre on each ham, and rub it in with the fingers, or make a solution of saltpetre and swab the hams with it; then add a tablespoonful, or more, of red pepper to each ham and rub it in; then add a table spoonful of good brown sugar or good new Orleans syrup to each ham and rub that in let the hams lay till the other meat is cut up and rubbed with salt and laid away: then take the hams and rub them with salt and lay them away single, on boards. The next morning or the next night, take up the hams and rub them with salt thor oughly and put them in tight tubs (molasses hogsheads out in two) till the end of smoke. The shoulders may be treated in the same way -the middlings need not be Smoke with tan bark or green hickory wood; kindle with light-wood chips. Have some hickory ashes prepared in dry weather and kept in a barrel in the smoke house, and counts, to sammon the parties to appear before when the meat is taken down (early in March) rub it all with ashes; lay away the hams by themselves in tubs or boxes; between every layer of hams put four sticks, made from old oak boards or seasoned wood. Pack the shoulders by themselves in the same way, and the sides or middlings the same. Overhaul the meat the 1st of May and 1st of July, and rub with ashes again if need be.

This is very troublesome: but every lover of ham must take pains in order to satisfy his delicate appetite." A BEAUTIFUL NATURAL LAW .- No finer proof of provident legislation and benevolent design, in the arrangement of the laws of nature, can be named, says the Boston Transcript, than is afforded by the method by which ice is formed. By a law of the physical universe, water condenses and grows heavier, and as it becomes chilled at the surface, sinks to the bottom under influence of edd. Whenever the temperature is not be low 40 degrees, the coldest water is found at the bottom part of a vessel or stream. Namberiess good effects are produced by this condensation. But if this law was not modified, it is plain that freezing would begin at the bottom of ponds, streams and lakes. In this case the summer's heat would not do away with the effects of the winter air, and in process of time every northern river would become congeated and useless for navigation, the polar waters would become solid fields of ice, and the temperature of the world suffer a

In this way, though all the ben eficial results of contraction are preserved, every had effect is obvinted.
